

Social Media and the Twittergraph Movement

The potential destruction of modern society can be traced to that evil mastermind of social media: Samuel Morse. One small invention, namely his telegraph, and his Morse Code developed for it in the early to mid-19th century, has led to the telephone, radio, television, cell phones, Email, text messages, Skype, Myspace, Facebook, Linked-In, Twitter, ad nauseum.

I suggest his invention was the catalyst leading to the destruction of modern society, not just the destruction of the United States of America. The social media bandwagon on which every Tom, Dieter and Henri has jumped nowadays has become a social media hearse. Witness the Twitter 101 class at DePaul University (http://media-newswire.com/release_1098001.html) that is, in my humble opinion, what shall become known as the final nail in the coffin inside that hearse. The timeline for the destruction of modern society began with Samuel Morse in the 1830's with his invention of the telegraph and Morse Code, and runs through to Craig Kanalley's Twitter 101 class at DePaul.

It is not enough to compare the United States, nor any other modern country, with ancient Rome or ancient Greece and their destruction. Their destruction was based on debauchery. Buddha knows there is enough debauchery in the United States to bring down any South American or African Nation, and will, in time, lead to the destruction of our once great country. However, this viral Social Media phenomenon rampant around the world is what will destroy modern societies all over the globe.

There is only one thing to do that may yet save the world as we know it. It is an idea that brings full circle, Samuel Morse's inventions and the use of Social Media, to slow, if not fully prevent, the destruction of society as we know it.
